

In regard to the NAB's attempt to prohibit satellite radio from providing traffic and weather info: It is simply unlawful to prohibit satellite radio from providing this instant information. Whatever happened to the First Amendment? This is jealousy on the part of the NAB members simply because satellite radio is a national forum and they don't like it. Pure and simple. If radio, in particular, was worth listening to in the first place, the situation would be different. Who wants to cipher through 15 minutes or more of pure crap just to get traffic and weather info when they can get it instantly on satellite radio? What about cross country truckers who don't know what stations to turn to from area to area they travel through to get this info. They especially need fast weather and traffic info instantly! With the growing popularity of satellite radio, it would be nothing more than criminal to remove this information from satellite radio. Not to mention a flagrant violation of the First Amendment. Government is intruding into too many areas, and we don't need another intrusion just because the NAB doesn't like satellite radio. Thanks for your consideration on this most important issue.
